Operational Observations

Inventory turnover cannot be calculated reliably until cost of goods and sales quantity are linked to inventory movement data.

Slow-moving inventory should be identified by aging movement rows; current data supports stock position and production volume, not aging valuation.

Risk Analysis

AI risk commentary unavailable; use the calculated KPI, expense, cash, and receivable tables for review.

Opportunities

Sote Phwar contributes 87.4% of absolute business-unit profit, so positive demand signals should be converted into disciplined growth targets.

Farm can reduce concentration risk if revenue contribution improves.

Inventory optimization requires unit cost and movement aging so management can separate fast-moving products from slow-moving stock.

Recommendations & Management Conclusion

Immediate Actions (30 Days)

- Retry after confirming local Qwen/Ollama is running, then regenerate the KPI PDF.
- Add unit cost fields to inventory records so future CEO reports can show inventory value, turnover, and margin by product.

Medium-Term Actions (90 Days)

- Set monthly budget thresholds for labor, logistics, marketing, and production cost categories using the expense breakdown page.
- Track revenue and profit targets separately for Sote Phwar and Farm, with Extension treated inside Sote Phwar expense control.

Strategic Actions (12 Months)

- Reduce profit concentration by scaling the business unit with the lowest revenue contribution and positive operating signals.
- Build a monthly management review pack around the same KPI definitions so trend lines remain comparable month to month.

Management Conclusion

AI management conclusion was not generated for this run.
